CONGRESS AND THE PRESS

The newspapers have recently contained a great deal of severe comment upon alleged attempts of the last Congress to interfere with the freedom of the press by the enactment of laws under which editors and proprietors may be arrested for libel and brought to Washington for trial in the Courts of that District. While the newspaper fraternity have no right to claim exemption from an equal responsibility with all other citizens, the ground of complaint has been the injustice of taking an editor who should publish a libel upon any public man, away from the locality of his business to be tried before a court at the National Capital, where it is claimed that official influence would be peculiarly potent to the rights of the accused. Knowing the jealousy with which the public regard any infringement of the privileges of the press it has seemed to us hardly possible that any Congressman of average sagacity would seek a direct conflict with the newspapers of the country, and we have been trying to find the actual basis of the complaints.

The first act of hostility was attributed to Senator Sherman of Ohio, who proposed a heavy increase of postage on newspapers. He seems to have been unaware of the excitement he would produce and, as he has never been handled very roughly by the press, we may reasonably credit his assertion that he was not governed by a spirit of revenge. He thought the newspapers did not pay their share of the cost of mail transportation and, with an entirely mistaken idea of the objects of the postal department made himself responsible for the advocacy of an excessive tax by unanimous vote upon the press. This measure did not prevail in Congress, and Mr Sherman has had abundant reason to regret his great mistake.

The next measure which excited remark was a bill introduced by Senator Carpenter from the Judiciary Committee, making the responsibility of principals for the acts of their agents. Its object was to provide that an agent transacting business for a principal residing elsewhere could be served with a process requiring a principal to answer a suit in the place where the agent made the transaction. This law was in harmony with the code almost of the States, and in its application to general business was not objected to. It was argued, however, that the secret object of the bill was to enable a person to serve process upon a newspaper correspondent in Washington for libel, etc., which would compel the principal to come thither for trial. Such an application of the law could only be made if a newspaper correspondent should be held to be the agent in respect of the matter or business out of which the case arises. Senator Carpenter has published a letter having stated that such is not the intent or meaning of the law. Certainly publishers do not regard correspondents as "agents" of their business, and it would require a great stretch of construction for any court to hold them as such. As the Senator who introduced the bill, and those who voted for it, declare that it had no such purpose and was equal to no such construction as alleged, it is not fair to assume that the Senate did more than pass the bill as an assault upon the press, and this assumption is strengthened by the fact that it received the support of a majority of the ablest and soundest lawyers in that body. If there was any other or deeper design in the bill, the promptness with which it has been disavowed shows that the press is still amply powerful for its own protection. The bill reached the House late in the session, and there being no time to discuss the validity of the objections urged by the newspapers, it was rejected without debate.

More recently it has been charged that in the closing hours of Congress a bill was smuggled through without attracting attention containing provisions equally obnoxious to the rights of the press with those before complained of. The act in question is exceedingly brief and as follows

That the criminal court of the District of Columbia shall have jurisdiction of all crimes and misdemeanors committed in said District, not lawfully tried in any other court, and which shall be injured by or to be prosecuted by indictment, on information.

See and that the provisions of the thirty third section of the judiciary act of 1789 shall apply to courts created by the act of Congress for the District of Columbia.

The section of the Act of 1789 referred to provides that "for any crime or offence against the United States," a person may be arrested imprisoned or bailed as the case may be by "any Justice or Judge of the United States or by any Justice of the Peace or other Magistrate of any of the United States" according to the usual mode of process, "for trial before such court of the United States as by this act has cognizance of the offence." The bill was introduced in the House by Mr. Poland of Vt., and in the Senate was explained by Messrs Edmunds and Frelinghuysen on behalf of the respective Judiciary Committees. The object of the bill is distinctly set forth by Mr. Poland in a letter to the Boston Advertiser, substantially as follows: The act of 1870 gave to the Police Court of the District of Columbia exclusive jurisdiction over certain criminal cases, and the Supreme Court of the District had recently indicated that Congress exceeded its constitutional power in granting so extensive criminal jurisdiction to a court wherein no provision was made for trial by jury. If such a decision should be actually rendered there would be a certain class of offences over which no court in the District would have jurisdiction and the object of the bill was to transfer such jurisdiction from the Police Court to the regular Criminal Court of the District. The second section was added, he says, because the judiciary act of 1789 applied only to the courts existing under that act and not to the courts of the District which have been established since; then rendering it impossible for a criminal indicted by a court of the District, who should escape into any of the States, to be arrested and reclaimed for trial. The section was adopted to place the courts of the District on the same footing with those existing at the time of the original act giving concurrent jurisdiction. This is Mr. Poland's explanation of the bill, which, he says, was unanimously reported from the Judiciary Committee of the House, passed without objection, slightly amended in the Senate and finally adopted in concurrence. His letter concludes as follows:

I never thought of newspapers in connection with the bill, and I presume no one else did, for I can see no possible effect it can have upon them or their conductors. I had no communication with the Senators named or any Senator, and I have no doubt they were as innocent of any design on the press as I was.

Whether the law is susceptible to any such construction as that which has excited the apprehension of some correspondents is a question for lawyers to decide; but it is very evident that the great majority of the members in both branches, who permitted the measure to pass without objection, had no idea that it contained any menace to the liberty of the press. Mr. Poland expressly denies any such purpose, and we do not know that Senators Edmunds or Frelinghuysen have had cause to feel any personal hostility toward the newspapers. It sometimes happens that a law, carefully drawn to meet a particular case, may subsequently prove to affect other matters, or to operate differently from what was anticipated. We have evidence of this at every session of a Legislature or of Congress, in the introduction of amendments and modifications of existing statutes. As this measure was obviously calculated to remedy the defects in the District Courts, it is but fair to credit the assertion of its framers, that they had no concealed design; and the very fact that any such design is repudiated affords the best assurance that no arbitrary exercise of a power, inadvertently sanctioned by Congress, would ever be attempted. There are undoubtedly some members of Congress who entertain most revengeful feelings towards the newspapers and who would be glad to satisfy their vengeance, but we believe these persons are exceptions, and that the larger number of members recognize obligations to the press of the country, and that they are sensible enough to understand that in fighting it they would invite a conflict with the people which could end only in disaster to themselves. The conductors of newspapers ask for no other protection than that accorded to all other citizens, and members of Congress are entitled to no other methods of redress than those provided for all. Public opinion in this country is too mighty to be curbed by any exercise of arbitrary power, and it would be the height of absurdity for such an attempt to be made by a body which depends for existence upon the suffrages of the people.

THE BEECHER TILTON AFFAIR. The friend alluded to by Tilton as the bearer of an intimation from Mr. Beecher that money would be furnished Tilton if he would go abroad, states that in a conversation with Mr. Beecher he spoke of Tilton as being worn by his labors and the excitement of the Council, and that his friends desired him to go to Europe, but that his financial affairs would not permit it. Mr. Beecher expressed sympathy, and said if he desired to go means could be provided. No impression was conveyed that Mr. Beecher desired to get Tilton out of the way.

As to the letter of contrition a correspondent of the Portland Press gives a version that Tilton became insane with jealousy through the insinuations of Bowen, and that with an equally sensational friend he called on Mr Beecher and "played high tragedy at him, until he lost his common sense, if not his reason. A pistol was pointed at his head, and under the mad excitement of the hour, in the apprehension of a tragedy and a delirium of he signed the document which has ever since been held as terrorism over him." The same writer says that Tilton's charge was improper advances which his wife repelled, and that Mrs Tilton exonerates Mr Beecher from the charge. Per contra, a Brooklyn paper publishes an interview with Theodore Tilton, in which the latter said the letter of apology published by him in the recent letter to the Rev Dr. Bacon as having emanated from Beecher was assumedly in Beecher's handwriting and bore his autograph, which would pass current in any bank in New York. It was written and dictated by Beecher himself, and was sent to Tilton unsolicited.

In further contradiction Mr Shearman, clerk of Plymouth church, says it can be easily shown that the letter cited by Tilton was never written by Mr. Beecher, and that nothing resembling it exists.

It is also stated that the biography of the Woodhull was written by her quondam husband, Col. Blood, and that Tilton put his name to it to induce her to keep silence. They afterwards had a falling out, and the scandal was published.

FIFTH DISTRICT. A Montville correspondent of the Lewiston Journal thus early announces that Hon Ebenezer Knowlton has consented to be a candidate for the succession to Mr. Hale.

The Democratic Legislature in New Hampshire is making a clean sweep of all the offices it can reach. The House was kept in session nearly all of Friday night, removing Republican Judges of Probate, Registers, Sheriffs, Solicitors, and even the Superintendent of Public Instruction. The work of decapitation was done by a bare quorum, and was carried on by a diligent use of the party whip, less than a score of Republicans being present out of a membership of 104. This application of strict party rules to judicial and educational offices is in marked contrast with the action of the Rhode Island General Assembly, which with a membership three quarters Republican, has just elected a Democratic lawyer to the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, making the fourth successive selection from that party to fill positions on the Supreme bench.

By a rescript from the full bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts the decision is made that the Boston Board of School Committee is sole judge of its own membership, and therefore the petition of Miss Peabody is dismissed. The public, on whichever side individual preference and opinion may stand, will be sincerely thankful that a decision is at last reached which leaves no open question. To secure action by the Legislature now remains the only course for the ladies and their supporters. The Advertiser says:

There are two ways of redress for the future: the first is by amending the city charter limiting the discretion of the school committee in this respect; the second and better way will be by electing members of the school committee who can be trusted to take a more sensible view of the subject.

Several newspapers have endeavored to impart a sensational bearing to Mr. Beecher's sermon last Sunday. On the contrary there was not the most distant allusion to the floating scandal, the text being on the perpetuity of God: "For thy maker is thine husband: the Lord of Hosts is his name: and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel, the God of the whole earth shall he be called." Isaiah liv: 5.

A dispatch from Palmyra says that the International yacht race took place Monday, eight yachts competing. The Cora, of Detroit, won in six hours, thirteen minutes and thirty seconds, the Oathbert, of Coburg, coming out second and the Lotus, of Detroit, third.

CARD.

The Board of Managers of the Home for Aged Women having secured a home, now propose to put the Home in operation. They have felt it a duty to take this step at the earliest moment possible, in compliance with the wishes of the friends of the institution, and in charity to those aged ones who hope to become beneficiaries. In doing so, and in order to sustain and conduct it successfully, they foresee that they may be compelled to rely, in a measure, on the income to be derived from the Trust Funds. They take this method to bring the matter before the subscribers to the Fund, and to solicit the favor of them, that they will at their earliest convenience, pay their subscriptions in order that the Money may realize the interest or income therefrom for immediate use. The Board cannot withhold the expression of the great desire they feel, that the Trust Fund of $25,000 should be completed at an early day, and the Home placed on a firm foundation. This fund now lacks about $5,000, and the Board confident in public sentiment and generosity of the citizens to complete it, and make this charitable institution what it ought to be. They would also solicit the donation of articles of furniture needed by the Home in commencing their house.

WASHINGTON.

A WAR RUMOR—INDEMNITY FOR THE MURDERED VIRGINIUS PRISONERS.

NEW YORK, June 30 The Herald's Washington special says that a grave rumor is afloat of a serious difficulty with Spain growing out of a peremptory demand by our Government through Minister Cushing, for a full indemnity for the Virginius prisoners slain by order of Burriel. Hamilton Fish on being interviewed on the subject said, "You may say that the American Government has made a prompt demand, and one quite as decided and peremptory as that made by the British Government, for indemnity for the lives of the prisoners destroyed and the loss to their families."

THE NEW CURRENCY BILL—HOW IT AFFECTS THE BANKS

The Herald's Washington despatch has the following Under the provisions of the new currency bill the Third National Bank of New York will reduce its circulation from $500,000 to $400,000, the lowest point to which the circulation of any bank can be reduced, and will receive $75,000 in bonds The American Exchange Bank of New York withdraws $70,000 in bonds for the reduction of its circulation Letters have also been received from New England banks giving notice of a like intention to reduce their circulation and withdraw bonds deposited for its security The two proposed Chicago banks with a capital of $450,000 have declined to go into operation.

THE PRESIDENT'S PREDICTIONS VERIFIED

The President recommended in his annual message to allow National Banks to reduce their circulation on depositing lawful money, and not requiring the retirement of notes of banks wishing so to do. He urged subsequently by leading bankers in New York and Boston that were this done the West and South could have all the national banking currency they would need. This is one of the reasons why he opposed expansion of the currency. What was then predicted is now being literally fulfilled. It is no longer an object for a banker to secure $4 in national bank notes with $5 in legal tenders, as is now the case while bonds are 16 and 17 cents premium, and $9,000 in notes are issued for $10,000 in bonds. The fact that the proposed banks in Chicago do not find it profitable to start under operations of the new law, makes the cry for more money a false one.

NEW YORK STATE.

A VERDICT BUT NO PRISONER.

BUFFALO, June 30. The jury in the case of Charles Bignall, charged with manslaughter for causing the loss of several lives by the falling of McArthur's building, which was erected under Sig wall's superintendence some time since, came into court this morning and announced that they were unable to agree. Judge Haight sent them back with instructions, and about noon the jury came in to court again and announced that they had agreed upon a verdict. The clerk polled the jury, and the judge asked if the prisoner was present. The prisoner not being in court all proceedings were stopped. The sheriff's force and the police have failed to find the prisoner, and it is suspected that he has fled to Canada. The court adjourned after ordering the jury locked up to await results.

THE BEECHER-TILTON SCANDAL

WHAT DR. BACON SAYS OF TILTON'S LETTER

NEW YORK, June 30. Rev. Leonard Bacon, to whom Tilton's letter was addressed, stated to Rev Dr Buddington of Brooklyn, soon after the publication that if Plymouth church did not reply within twenty-four hours by a suit for libel in behalf of its pastor it would have no case on which it could stand before the christian world. He also said that if Tilton had not published the letter he should have done so.

TENNESSEE.

AN UNKNOWN CORPORATION.

MEMPHIS, June 30 Chancellor Walker in the case of Venable against The Paducah & Memphis Railroad for damages, has decided that no such corporation as Paducah & Memphis Railroad is known to the laws, the authority under which the charter was granted having been unconstitutional. The decision, if sustained by the Supreme Court, will render all contracts entered into by said corporation null and void.

BOSTON.

ATTEMPTED MURDER.

BOSTON, June 30 A desperate attempt was made yesterday by Maxime E. Sidwick to murder his wife, who had left him for alleged cruel treatment and was working in a boarding house on Washington st. He obtained entrance to the house, and finding his wife alone, attacked her with a knife, inflicting several severe and, it is feared, fatal, wounds He was arrested.

GREAT BRITAIN.

THE DEMONSTRATION AGAINST ROCHEFORT

NEW YORK, June 30. The London correspondent of the Tribune says that extreme suffering by seasickness was the cause of Rochefort's landing at Queenstown. His arrival was unexpected, but a ferocious crowd gathered quickly about him. There was plenty of yelling and hooting, and would have been violence but for the police. As the opponent of priests and of MacMahon Rochefort would naturally be disliked by such Roman Catholic Irish as might happen to have heard of him, but the immediate cause of the row is probably to be found in the Reuter despatch from New York alleging that Rochefort had published a letter approving of the murder of the Archbishop of Paris, a calumny which can hardly be excused. Rochefort was followed from the pier to his hotel and again to the railway station, from which, happily, the mob was shut

COLLEGE HONORS. The Harvard class of '71, just graduated, is said to have been remarkable in many particulars, and especially for the strength and prowess of its boating men, and and the athletes at base ball and cricket. It has been noticeable, too, for the peculiar changes in the positions of individuals as regards rank. For example, a student, marked out two years ago to lead his class, was finally distanced by fifteen or sixteen others, the head man being one from whom much less was expected. Another, not looked upon for particular distinction, took three class honors, a very rare and noteworthy example. The class poet likewise, was overlooked on the first election, and assumed the task very late. Indeed, it was at one time deemed expedient not to have any class poet, so little poetical talent appeared to be developed, and yet Fenollosa's is regarded as the best that has been delivered for many years.

Another young man of great purity and dignity of character, very high-minded, acknowledged to possess more than respectable general ability, and, who, in his junior year stood well in his class, did not even get his degree.—(Saturday Evening Gazette.

—We finish this morning the publication of a very interesting story by Mrs. H. G. Rowe of this city, which appears in the July Atlantic. The story will appear entire in our next weekly edition.

—We are indebted to the gentlemen and ladies of the committee of arrangements for a polite invitation to attend the exercises at the dedication of a Soldiers' Monument at Cherryfield, July 4th.

—Mr. Frank E. Collins of Brewer showed us yesterday some green peas grown in his garden this season. The pods are well filled out, and Mr. Collins will have "green peas for the 4th of July," sure.

—The steamer C. B. Sanford, with the barge Fairy of the Wave, will make an excursion to Bucksport July 4th, leaving here at 7 30 A. M., and touching at Hampden. Returning, will leave Bucksport at 6 P. M.

—A "Wandering Jew" of great luxuriance strayed away from the veranda of Captain Flowers' residence on Union-st, Sunday evening, and the owner offers ten dollars if it will return accompanied by the chief.

—It is said that an arrangement has been made between the Boston & Maine and Eastern railroads for each to sell tickets over the road of the other company. If so, it will be a great convenience to the travelling public.

—The Board of Managers of the Home for Aged Women having secured a house to process to put the Home in practical operation, and make an appeal to the public, in card published elsewhere to complete the fund required for its support.

—The third out-door concert by the Bangor Cornet Band was given in Centre Park last evening, and was, like its predecessors, much enjoyed by an immense crowd which gathered in and about the Park. The next concert of the series will be given some evening next week.

—A. K. Bangs, Esq., manager for the Howe Sewing Machine Company for this State, has removed his headquarters to Portland, but will continue to hold the position. He has sold about 2,000 machines during the past four years. The agency for this city has been taken by Mr. G. W. Coffin, at 17 Main-st.

—The corner stone of Trinity church at Exeter will be laid on Wednesday of next week, when addresses will be made by several Episcopal clergymen, and David Barker, Esq., will read a poem. The boy choirs of St. Mark's church, Augusta, and St. John's church of this city, will assist in the services. A public dinner will be served on the grounds.

—A new boiler from Sullivan's works has been put in on the premises of the Bangor Gaslight Co., to be used in case of accident to the one already in service. The old boiler has been moved several feet to allow the putting in of fifteen new retorts, on which the masons are now busily at work under the superintendence of Mr. George V. Lewis.

—The St. Croix & Penobscot Railroad have paid to the State Treasurer the whole amount of tax assessed for the year 1874 upon said road by the Governor and Council under the act of March 4, 1874. This is the first road to comply with the provisions of the law, and the company have paid the full tax before it became due.

—We were pleased to receive a call yesterday from Charles H. True, Esq., formerly editor of the Portland Star and now editor of the Dakota Republican, published at Yankton. Mr. True was reported as having perished in the great prairie fire of last season, but he has read his numerous obituaries with satisfaction and comes back to Maine on a brief visit looking hale and hearty.

—The Baccalaureate address at the anniversary of the Mt. Holyoke (Mass.) Female Seminary was delivered last Sabbath evening by Rev. J. R. Scarlet, D. D., formerly Professor in the Theological Seminary in this city, and Rev. Samuel Harris, D. D., also formerly connected with the Bangor Seminary, delivers the annual address on Thursday, Commencement day.

—The sermon given in the vestry of the Central church, last evening, in aid of a destitute church in Virginia, was attended by an excellent audience and was a delightful entertainment. Vocal and instrumental music of a high order and select readings made up the programme; but as an "injunction" has been served on us to prevent its publication, we are unable to present it to our readers.

—The E. & N. A. Railway Company are fixing up what has been used for their wood shed at Mattawamkeag for a repair shop for their wood work. This is to be used till it is determined where they will locate the machine shops. This is thought an omen that they will eventually locate their machine shops at Mattawamkeag, as many of the officials favor that location. Hon. Asa Smith has offered the Company twenty acres of land surrounding the present depot, for that purpose.

—The attendance on the Spiritual seance given at City Hall last evening, by T. Warren, filled the gallery and floor of the room. The medium was seated in a cabinet about five feet square, securely bound, and the usual manifestations were given, such as the ringing of bells, thumming of a guitar, etc. Several gentlemen and ladies present went into the cabinet and held the medium's hands while some of the occurrences took place, and stated that they saw lights, faces, and forms and heard the names of dead friends called. Hands were seen at the openings in the curtain and other manifestations were given

FRANCIS H. BUDGE, Esq., who died in Springfield on the 11th inst, at the age of 75 years, was born in Bangor Feb. 17th, 1799, and was the youngest child of Captain James Budge, one of the early settlers here. Capt. Budge once owned what is now called City Point. The family moved to Levant seventy-four years ago, and were the early settlers of that place. Deceased married Abigail G. Smith, and removed to Springfield in 1840, and was one of the early settlers there. He raised a family of seven sons and one daughter, all of whom are living and settled in that vicinity. His wife died in 1846.

RETURNED PATIENTS. O. H. Ingalls, Esq., of the Board of Overseers, has brought back six persons—one male and five females—from the Insane Hospital at Augusta, they being the first instalment of those having their settlement in this city ordered among others to be removed by the last Legislature. This act of the Legislature in ordering the discharge from the Hospital of a large number of patients, whom the cities and towns of their settlement have no facilities for giving proper care and treatment, seems of very doubtful expediency, and must result in much suffering to the unfortunates, even where municipalities do the most in their power for them

BANGOR POLICE COURT

THE THUNDER STORM.

REPORTS OF FURTHER DAMAGES.

Reports continue to come in from all sides of the great damage done by the thunder storm of Monday afternoon and evening, and by all accounts it was the most disastrous which has visited this region for years.

THE DAMAGE BY WATER

resulting from the immense rainfall was even greater than we anticipated in our report of yesterday. The streets were badly washed, and in many places deep gullies were cut through streets and side-walks. Partly finished sewers were flooded and the loss thrown upon the contractors is considerable.

Wood, Bishop & Co., whose foundry was flooded by the clogging of sieves, lose about $2,000. A large number of their patterns were ruined, many tools were lost, and it will require several days' labor to get things into running order again.

The purifying rooms, engine room, plaster sheds and other buildings of the Bangor Gaslight Company were flooded, and their loss will reach several hundred dollars.

Every cellar on the east side of Exchange st, between State and Hancock sts., was more or less flooded, and Hoskins & Veazie, Norton & Farrington, G. L. Phillips, J. O'B. Darling, Leighton & Co. and Blood & Rowe lose from $25 to $1000 each, the total damage amounting to some $2,500 or $3,000. The cellars of private residences on many other streets were flooded, and more or less damage resulted.

THE DAMAGE BY LIGHTNING

was great. We mentioned the burning of Capt. J. H. Stewart's hay barn in East Hampden (loss $600), the shattering of Mr. C. G. Glidden's residence in Brewer (loss $300) and other minor damages by the electric fluid, in yesterday's paper. Since then we hear of the following:—

The large barn on the stock farm of Geo D. Stockwell, Esq., in East Eddington, was struck by lightning in the early evening, and Edward Everett Leighton a young man of about 21 years of age, who had stepped into to avoid the shower, was instantly killed. Mr E. W. Leighton, his father, stood within five feet of him, but escaped unharmed, though somewhat stunned. Three valuable horses belonging to Mr. Stockwell were killed by the bolt, which shattered the barn considerably, but fortunately did not set on fire. Mr. Stockwell had a narrow escape having been leaning against a post only a few moments before it was shattered.

The residence of E. P. Lanall, Esq. on Buck street, near the Hampden road, was struck by lightning at 7 20 o'clock, the bolt coming down out of the corner of the chimney and distributing itself in a decidedly disagreeable manner over a chamber and the parlor. Mrs. Lanall had been in the chamber to close a window, and went down into the parlor where she had just seated herself when the lightning struck. Mr. and Mrs. Newmarch were also seated in the parlor, and all three were rendered insensible by the shock, but suffered no serious injury. The fluid around a mantel attached to the chimney was splintered up so that Mr. Lanall brought it all into this office yesterday in a newspaper; there is hardly a piece left an inch in thickness or more than two feet long, so thoroughly was it smashed. A number of gilt picture frames were burned and blackened, a large mirror in the parlor was demolished, and the fluid followed and blackened the gilt pattern on the wall-paper in a curious manner. The clock and some vases on the mantel were thrown across the room, and nearly everything movable got a thorough shaking up. After cutting up some curious freaks the fluid ran down a pump and disappeared. The house was considerable shattered, a hole being torn in the roof, and some of the timbers split, and the damage will amount to between $200 or $300.

The barn of Mr. Steven Emerson of North Newburgh was struck, badly shattered and one end torn completely out, but was not set on fire. The fluid reappeared in the cellar of the house ten or fifteen rods away, which it filled with a dense sulphurous smoke, but did not damage.

A house at Sandy Point, whose owner's name we did not learn, was almost entirely demolished by lightning, all the windows being blown out, the roof shattered and the walls splintered. No one was in it at the time.

The barn of a Mr Hill at Thomaston, situated near the bridge, was struck and burned to the ground, together with four horses, a number of harnesses, farming tools, hay and grain. Several cows and swine were got out uninjured, and the house near by was saved

The buildings on the Park at Foxcroft were partially demolished by a thunderbolt but no one was in the vicinity.

Reports of trees struck in many directions have come to hand, and we think we are safe in saying that the storm did an unprecedented amount of damage.

PENOBSCOT COUNTY FARMERS' CLUB

MEETING AND DISCUSSION.

The Penobscot County Farmers' Club met at the Fuller School House in this city on Saturday. The question for discussion was "At what time shall we cut our grass and how cure it?" Mr Ferguson opened the discussion. His views were that hay should be cut early and cured faithfully, not dried so it would break, but enough to prevent heating. He advocated the use of machinery.

Mr. Fenderson believed in cutting early, as soon as the grass is in blossom, using good judgment in curing He objected to the use of machinery and said the mower injured by cutting too close and the rake by gathering up dirt, sticks, etc.

Mr. Hill would cut early, or when in blossom. Mow after the dew was off if possible; rake in the afternoon, and haul in that or the next day without opening. He would have the barn so arranged as not to put more than one or two loads on a hand the same day, and let it settle gradually.

Mr. Leighton said he had learned how to spoil hay by putting in too green. If he had a barn sealed up and plastered would put it in green, if there was no dew on it. Had tried the experiment by putting some in a hogshead and heading up. He also advocated early cutting.

Mr. Jewett thought every man should be his own judge. Some kinds of grass should be mowed sooner than others; referred to white-weed, buttercups, etc. His "plan" was to commence as soon after the 4th as practicable. Mow in the forenoon; roll up when warm, open the next day and get it in when hot. He valued machines highly; preferred the wheel revolving rake.

Mr. Sawyer advocated commencing early; grass is apt to get too ripe before finishing. He had changed his views some since he had commenced farming. He did not dry so thoroughly now. Had long experience in rakes and mowers and thought them a great blessing to farmers, and also thought the idea of rakes and mowers injuring land groundless.

Mr. Baker of Bangor, would mow after the dew was off and rake immediately; having it made but little, would place but a little on a band the same day. Feed out one band at a time in winter. He used machines.

Mr Arey cut grass very early; could fat stock on early cut hay if rightly cured. He seeded very heavy.

Mr. Jordan favored early cutting, especially for milch cows He thought the barns had something to do with curing; as a general thing they were too open. He gave his experiment on early and late cut hay, showing that it required only half the meal to produce the same flow of milk with early cut hay.

Mr. Work thought the subject a broad one. He considered Maine the best State in the Union to produce hay. His theory was to keep more stock. The time of cutting was very uncertain; this season is two weeks later than the average. He would leave no dead furrows in his fields; did not think they amounted to anything for surface draining, but were an incumbrance to the mower. He agreed with Mr. Baker as to the manner of mowing hay; thought if labor was plenty machines would not pay, even at the high wages.

Mr. Hunt said we are too long cutting and much of the hay gets too ripe cut early; do not dry too much, and use the mower and rake.

Mr. Jibbs said there was one point in cutting hay not too green or too ripe—not green enough to have it wither or ripe enough to break in its woody state. He believed it was the blossoms that made butter yellow. He would never roll hay in windrows, but pitch it in small forks full in piles so the air could have free access. He advocated putting in very green, if cut when the dew was all off, would use machines.

The President (Mr. Luce) said he could hardly tell the time to cut hay, but thought a rather state than most had advanced better. Clover head should be ripe or in seed; what turned the blossoms to seed was a lack of moisture from the soil. He did not wish to burn his hay in the sun; strongly advocated the use of mower and rake.

Mrs. Work said she was not ashamed to be called a farmer's wife and pointed out a far better way to harvest the crops by feeding the men well and not overworking them. Said she wished to learn to manage the farm, as her husband might loose his senses or go to Congress.

Remarks were made by Mr. Carter and others, which closed the discussion.

Farmers by noticing the above remarks will see that the theory advanced by the majority of the members present in regard to cutting and curing hay, is: Cut early and not dry so it will break in the hands, and welcomed all good machinery as one of the great steps in the advancement of their occupation.

The Club adjourned to meet at the Fuller school house the second Saturday in August, when farmers are requested to bring their wives and daughters with them. The subject for discussion will be "How can we make our farms produce the most hay?"

A TERRIFIC THUNDER STORM occurred Monday afternoon at Wilkesbarre, Pa., causing considerable damage. Geo. Warner, a miner in the Moffit mines, was struck by lightning a mile and a half under ground and severely though not fatally injured, the lightning having followed the railroad track into the mines. A workman in the gas house was scorched by lightning, the Memorial church was struck, the rear end being somewhat shattered, and the South st. wire bridge caught a blaze of fire for a short time. The telegraph office in the First National bank was visited by the fluid, and the operators were considerably frightened by the balls of fire which in quick succession entered by the wires and harmlessly exploded. During the storm the wind blew down the scaffolding around the court house, hundreds of trees all over the city were uprooted or broken, causing a complete blockade of some of the streets. The storm lasted but fifteen minutes, the thermometer standing at 100° in the shade before the shower, and afterwards fell to 80°.

The Aroostook Pioneer says: "Next Thursday the Republicans of the Fourth District will meet in convention at Bangor to nominate a candidate for member of Congress. As Gen. Hersey has consented to serve another term, there is no question that he will receive the nomination."

BAZAINE IN EXILE. Marshal Bazaine, contrary to what is generally thought, is undergoing real and severe detention. He is confined within the fort, and has but the terrace on which to take his walks. The rest of the island is forbidden ground to him. He has no garden at his disposal, as has been reported, with the exception of a few trees and flowers on the terrace. Madame Bazaine is with him. The view is extensive only from the terrace, whence the open sea may be discovered. There is not sufficient fresh water in the island, and a small boat, which serves to communicate with the coast, brings over the quantity necessary. The ex-marshal at first suffered a great deal from this scarcity of water. He was obliged to reduce his baths in order to water the flowers on the terrace. Hence his aid-de-camp had to go to Paris to ask that a more abundant supply of fresh water might be brought from the main land, a request which was at once granted, to the great joy of the prisoner. Bazaine bears a very uniform life and seems resigned to his lot. He reads much, works all the morning, is taciturn, and avoids as much as possible showing himself.

NEWS BREVITIES.

Bishop Whelan, Catholic Bishop of Wheeling, West Virginia, who has been seriously ill at St. Agnes Hospital in Baltimore, is convalescent.

A deputation of one hundred locked-out farmers started from Newmarket, England, Monday, on a tour through the agricultural districts to plead their cause.

The St. George, N. B, Red Granite Company's works, including buildings, machinery and a large quantity of polished marble, was totally destroyed by fire Saturday night. The loss is estimated at $20,000; insured.

The death of Gen. Concha is considered in Paris an event of great political importance. It is believed that Concha intended to proclaim Prince Alfonso King, as soon as the campaign against the Carlists was brought to a successful issue, and the Madrid Government deeply mistrusted him.

HYDROPHOBIA. Dr. J. C. Dalton of New York suggests the following precautions with reference to hydrophobia:

"1. A dog that is sick from any cause should be watched and treated carefully until his recovery.

"WHAT GOOD WILL ALL THIS STUDY DO?"

BY MISS MARY B. BARTLETT

[The following essay was not written for publication, but was composed by Miss Bartlett, and read as a portion of the exercises at her recent graduation as a member of the Class of 1874, Bangor High School. At the earnest request of teachers and friends, the youthful author has consented to its appearance in our columns, and we think every reader will at least be admirably pleased by a young lady of seventeen is eminently worthy of preservation in type. The writer gives evidence of the possession of talent of a very high order, and her teachers may well be proud of her tribute to the health-giving of our public schools.—[EDS. WHIG.]

Since first our youthful feet began to tread
The steep, ascending ways where Wisdom led,
In all their windings—through the pleasant glades
Where springs Pierian gurgle in the shades,
And the groves, the gardens, and the bowers,
Where knowledge spreads her fair and fragrant flowers,
In caverns dark, where, hid in mountains deep,
Fair Science, sentinels their treasure keep,— Whene'er we lingered for a moment a rest,
Whene'er, with zeal renewed, we onward pressed,
Some captious voice has ever croaked anew
These words, "What good will all this study do?"

And now, as in a happy retrospect
We trace the well known paths with sunshine dotted,
Here are the wonders we have seen and heard,
And here our hearts with hopes no more deferred,
But gaze in rapture toward the far off cloudy heights,
Where mystic glory dazzles, yet invites,
Can we, can those lofty summits with our own,
The Hard Hill we have climbed and known,
And while, half tearful, at our childish pebble,
Which lame at we had climbed the mountain side,
While we remembered the longing soul
Lo! Oh, yet not! You have not reached the goal
Behold how those hollow voices still pursue,
What good, I say, what good will all this study do?

Fancy or fact, to low voices to answer,
Have no power to raise our doubts or fears,
Unanswered have they held their own all away,
Now clamorous, now murmuring, their way
Full deeply feel we, in our inmost hearts,
That what they speak, is true in a great part.
We say, ask of study and they think, Pedant,
In solitude hast storms beating empty pates,
Of Latin verbs and nouns in motley crowds,
By Fancy, loved to weave untimely shrouds,
Of algebraic far worse than that of Greek,
Which has no clue to guide the wandering foot
And that the greatest, hear a wise!
Ask, Cicero, always to be feared,
Of tares and crops old matters and bugs and flowers
Ah! "Sap Proteus all his beauty, hath its thorns."

You speak of study, said I, think—th me,
What work lean kill you what we think and "see"
Perhaps—out of chaos brought,
The an discovered marvels planing thoughts,
The wonders hidden in each tiny leaf
Lie sapphire, sky, with following worlds beyond
The harmony of all things, and the bond
That binds such minds as of the soul high—
That inch of body—great Teacher! as with feet,
Is so—nous bowed, with scholars reverence meet

Perhaps, if they say Such knowledge must found
In dusty books more than those words abound,
But walking with fair Nature face to face,
We learn the secret of her sublime grace
But as reflection, as some crystal brook,
The wing of them, the moonlight fairy look,
So clearly mirrored in another's mind,
Now hence in objects fair before mind,
And books are but the stories, hence this
To him who sees nature fresh divide,
How wise eternal life and death combined,
Yield a book our God himself revealed!
How strange and blinding Nature's hidden are,
To some wise book becomes a guiding star!
Of human books—bright lamps gill each dark road,
Till, where the streets are gold, we no longer need.

But some may say, what we have often heard,
"Against such study say we not a word!
To study science is a noble thing,
Its pages real delight and wisdom bring,
But those of dead and buried ancient tales,
Whose reading largely in our schools prevails—
Fiction's fabulists may be well enough
But Oh! this mean Greek and Latin stuff!
Why must you all these worn-out things renew
What good will all this ancient study do?

We, friends, in ancient times were modern then
Rather such old and lived like other men,
Fighting and feasting, they warred, poured, laughed and wept,
And wan renown, then with their fathers slept,
As we do now—our ancestors were they
And all that they remembered pass away!
Ingratitude, base base of earthly shame,
Erase the blood that courses in their veins,
Why, shall not the descendant of the Greeks,
Forget the debt they owe to Greece and Rome
If we in their soil the fairest garlands spring,
To grace the triumphs of our native tongue
Shall languages they shall then and then
We—separate branches in everything we say—
So many now is where beauty ever we know,
Not like a stalk of foliage, but a tree,
What scornful smile would rise at his expense,
Who said to say that, nineteen centuries hence,
Our own loved Shakespeare would forgo of one—
And shall a Homer or a Virgil die?
Let great that they are dead, that no, or again
Their thoughts shall animate a long, or long
In many a fond long, incessant use
Let great or gross of it organic rise,
Nor we the lure like forbear to find
Lost impressions of the human mind

Shall this sun to whom we owe
Not power can rich in hold the joys of light
And yet we wise lam blind who our sons
And for to make enlighten them are we
We invite a school that we know not to be just,
And to our sons offer dimes forget
Yet we ask you no more than fit
Fairly will show the good fruit

FUCK IN THE PULPIT.

BY MRS. H. G. ROWE

(Concluded.)

He was, or ought to have been, edified by Mrs. Standfield's plainly expressed opinion that it was "minister's duty to marry," as well in her conversation that "if it could be brought about, twas a great deal better to marry a thief out of the church than a parish," to which the minister assented, rather sheepishly it must be confessed, as he caught a gleam of it from Jotham's watchful eyes, and felt the unfortunately conscious that his would-be mentoress was taking him decidedly ridiculous in the eyes of the silent but evidently with awaiting personage

That night, on their way home from the evening service, the deacon took occasion to remark, gravely, that there was "to be a church meeting Monday," and "it isn't be at all surprising if they should conclude to give somebody a pretty strong call, a prophecy that soon proved itself, for, before the Christmas holidays were quite over Maurice Eldon was fairly installed as pastor of the long pastorless church, and an inmate, for the present, of the hospitable deacon's well-ordered household

Of course, the young minister's first duty was to make the acquaintance of his flock individually, and here his boots, ever-ready horse and sleigh were brought into requisition, and with Miss Abigail as a guide he drove across the wide, snow-covered levels, where the eye was dazzled and delighted by long reaches of white, glistening snow that shone beneath the rays of the midday sun like the face of Israel's deliverer as he came forth from the presence of his God, up and down the pine-crowned hills, where sturdy evergreens stood calmly looking sky-ward, triumphant of the winter's chill winding-sheet beneath, to the scattered, outlying farm houses where genial smiles and a hearty, if homely greeting, were always ready for the new minister, who seemed somehow to have found a warm corner in every heart through out the length and breadth of the parish!

But far more precious than this personal popularity to the heart of the young preacher was the evident spiritual improvement of his people.

Old grudges were laid aside, old enemies reconciled, old feuds forgotten, and brother met brother with outstretched hand and friendly word, strewing the sweet flowers of Christian charity over the graves of all old enemies, and earnestly striving, each in his own way, to be a helper and friend to the church and to his fellow-men.

Miss Abigail had really brightened up considerably, and when out from under her mother's sharp eye, she sometimes indulged in a burst of gaiety and merriment that would have astonished her mother had only seen her in her midnight hour thoroughly home orbit.

"Mr. Eldon," she said to him confidentially, as they jogged on, one morning, on their calling tour, "I do wish you would come to call on Deacon Standfield, and Sister Mr. Standfield, and Sister Mr. Standfield, and I want to talk with, to pick up the sweet, old, English, jolly Irish couple in the whole parish."

The minister laughed: "Of course, I should love to see greater pleasure; but all people are these paragons of young?"

"Only an old lady and—I was going to say 'a little girl;' but, I declare, Rose is eighteen in the next month, although she is such an innocent, unaffected little thing that she seems even younger than that; and her grandmother, old Mrs. Mayberry, is one of the most interesting and lovable old ladies that ever lived. She had seen better days, so people say, but I really doubt if she has seen happier ones, even if she is lame, and poor, and old. She Rose is strength and wealth, and youth to her, and she didn't have her in her days of plenty, if she had everything else.

The minister only nodded in reply, and his companion, fearing that she had been too freespoken in her friend's praises, grew suddenly silent, although she did not fail to notice and wonder at the sudden nervousness displayed by one who had seemed so perfectly self-possessed in the best parlors of the best houses in the parish, when, on alighting at the door of grandmother Mayberry's little unpretending cottage, he fidgeted uneasily with the fur gauntlets of his riding gloves for a full minute before knocking, and when Rose's sweet face appeared, with its smile and blush of welcome, she was tempted to laugh at the embarrassment that showed itself both in look and tone as he stammered out a few hasty words of greeting so different from his naturally cordial and easy-spoken manner.

"Grandmother will be delighted to see you, Mr. Eldon," the young girl said, with a modest self-possession that gave an air of womanliness to her girlish face and figure, as she led the way to an adjoining room, where comfort-abyssated in her chintz-covered rocking chair, was an old lady—I use the term advisedly, for Mrs. Mayberry was a "lady" from the crown of silvery hair, smoothly banded above the placid forehead, to the toe of the neatly slippered foot that rested helplessly upon the cushion beneath, and the young man knew, even before her gentle, cultured tones fell upon his ear, that he was a woman, delicate and refined, and—with a second look at the peaceful, chastened face—pure in heart as in word and deed.

There was a motherly tenderness in her manner as she laid her feeble hand impressively upon his arm, and as her clear, calm eyes scanned his face, remarked with that simple directness that is always best calculated to make a stranger forget his stranger-hood.

"I am glad to see you, very glad as well as well as grateful for your kindness in giving us such an early call when there were so many claimants upon your time and attention."

Then passing with easy facility to other topics, she gradually drew from him many a treasured pearl of thought and fancy that had hitherto lain unseen, waiting for the summons of a congenial soul, while from the varied stores of her own strength, deep and life she brought forth many a wonderful gem of comfort, encouragement and hope

"I have suffered many things," she said, in her sweet, quaint phraseology, "the loss of husband, children, friends and fortune, but I have never lost my trust in Him, who gave and taken of all my blessings, and now, in my old age and helplessness, He has given me this little sunny home-nest and my own baby's baby to comfort me with her love to the last."

An arm crept tenderly around her neck, and a soft, tear wet cheek was pressed lovingly for a moment against her own. There was no need of words, heart answered to heart, and the aged woman was comforted and the younger strengthened by this little wordless expression of mutual love and trust.

It was a beautiful picture, and when, that evening, the young minister read the chapter for family devotions, Abigail's womanly shrinkings was quite lost in the interest with he chose the touching story of the fair Moabitess and her aged friend, while, pleasantly abstracted, she recalled the events of the day, and the minister's evident interest in the inmates of the little cottage

"It was shy, and didn't show her best graces of heart and mind on a short acquaintance," she thought; "but she was always at home with them, and could speak freely and without restraint; so perhaps it would be best to have her there as much as possible, and if—"

"Forgive all our vain and wandering thoughts," prayed the minister, and poor Abigail dropped her guilty head upon her hands, and tried to forget all about Rose Mayberry's possible future in an earnest, when petition for the patient endurance of which her conscorely tried heart stood so much in need.

That was a happy winter, and if Mr. Eldon did spend a great deal of his leisure at the Mayberry cottage, nobody wondered, for old Mrs. Mayberry was such "pleasant company," and besides, Abigail Standfield was almost always with him on these occasions, and public opinion had already established her as the future mistress of the parsonage. To be sure there were some who hinted that Jotham Springer might have a word to say about that, but they were frowned down by the more knowing part of the community.

It was at the close of a raw March day, and Mr. Eldon had just returned from a long sleigh drive over the hills to visit a sick parishioner, tired in mind and body, and as he rode slowly along through the fast-gathering twilight shadows, his eyes instinctively turned toward the bend in the road just beyond, from which the lighted windows of Mrs. Mayberry's cottage always looked out at him with a gleam of friendly welcome—a welcome that had never failed him, he thought gratefully, as across the cold stretch of snow shone a tiny ray of brightness, that somehow, while it reminded him of those Mayberry sunny smile, made him forget Mrs. Standfield's waiting tea-table, as making his way up the snow-covered path, he knocked lightly at the door of the cottage.

He waited strangely beneath the harp wand for some moments, but no one answered his summons, and taking the privilege of an every day friend, he quietly lifted the latch and entered the little kitchen, warm, lighted, and with the daintily spread table in the centre of the floor, but vacant. A hum of voices in Mrs. Mayberry's rooms attracted his attention, and advancing, he stood for an instant upon the threshold of the open door, unseen and unheard, while he took in at a glance the full beauty of the picture before him

Upon the low cushion, at her grandmother's feet, sat the young girl, her brown hair brightened to gold in the firelight, and her sweet face gravely shy as she said, apparently in reply to some question of her grandmother:

"No, grandma, no, no don't urge me, please. I have thought it over and over, but I don't and I can't love him."

The old lady smoothed caressingly the soft bands above her child's forehead, and there was a little quaver of disappointment in her tones as she said hesitatingly:

"I always thought that—that you liked him very much. He is a good, honest, intelligent man, what can you have against him?"

"Nothing"

And the fair forehead grew crimson in the ruddy light, while a regretful look, saddened for a moment the girlish face, as she added, in a lower tone

"I did like him very much, so much that I used to think that it was really love, especially when he was so kind and helpful during your sickness last summer, and if he had asked me then, perhaps I should have answered him differently; but now—"

What has changed your mind?"

For a moment there was no answer. The girl's face was hidden in the folds of her grandmother's dress, while even the small hands that rested upon her lap grew red with shame.

"Did you remember," and she raised her head with an air of pretty womanly dignity, as if deprecating her display of childish weakness a moment before, "the first sermon that Mr. Eldon preached for us? I told you all about it when I came home. It was on the love of Christ for his church, and he compared it in strength, tenderness and entire unselfishness, to the purest, highest type of earthly love—the love that God himself sanctioned and blessed in the beginning, when the world was new. I can not explain it to you, to myself, even, but I knew, while I listened to his noble conception of a real, true earthly love, that I had never before known even the meaning of the word, much less its power."

"You are wiser than I dreamed, little one," and as she bent to kiss the rosy lips uplifted to her own, Mrs. Mayberry could then even in the doorway fastened upon them with a look she could not fail to interpret; while, unheeding her startled salutation, the young man stepped hastily forward, his face pale with emotion, and dropping upon his knees by the girl's side, drew both, her trembling hands within his own, as he said, with a manly tenderness that was in itself the best declaration of his love:

"Rose, it was your own sweet face that inspired my tongue at that time. Will you be my inspiration through life, walking hand-in-hand with me to do our Lord's work by pouring in our own lives that 'love is the fulfilling of the law?'"

Poor little Rose! She had imagined the full meaning of his words, but now, as the sweet, old, English, jolly Irish couple in the whole parish, she felt, in spite of herself, a little

The minister laughed: "Of course, he would give me greater pleasure; but all people are these paragons of young?"

"Now, I am sure you are welcome to my opinion, which is, in a little girl, but, I declare, Rose is eighteen in the next month, although she is such an innocent, unaffected little thing that she seems even younger than that; and her grandmother, old Mrs. Mayberry, is one of the most interesting and lovable old ladies that ever lived. She had seen better days, so people say, but I really doubt if she has seen happier ones, even if she is lame, and poor, and old. She Rose is strength and wealth, and youth to her, and she didn't have her in her days of plenty, if she had everything else.

The minister only nodded in reply, and his companion, fearing that she had been too freespoken in her friend's praises, grew suddenly silent, although she did not fail to notice and wonder at the sudden nervousness displayed by one who had seemed so perfectly self-possessed in the best parlors of the best houses in the parish, when, on alighting at the door of grandmother Mayberry's little unpretending cottage, he fidgeted uneasily with the fur gauntlets of his riding gloves for a full minute before knocking, and when Rose's sweet face appeared, with its smile and blush of welcome, she was tempted to laugh at the embarrassment that showed itself both in look and tone as he stammered out a few hasty words of greeting so different from his naturally cordial and easy-spoken manner.

"Grandmother will be delighted to see you, Mr. Eldon," the young girl said, with a modest self-possession that gave an air of womanliness to her girlish face and figure, as she led the way to an adjoining room, where comfort-abyssated in her chintz-covered rocking chair, was an old lady—I use the term advisedly, for Mrs. Mayberry was a "lady" from the crown of silvery hair, smoothly banded above the placid forehead, to the toe of the neatly slippered foot that rested helplessly upon the cushion beneath, and the young man knew, even before her gentle, cultured tones fell upon his ear, that he was a woman, delicate and refined, and—with a second look at the peaceful, chastened face—pure in heart as in word and deed.

There was a motherly tenderness in her manner as she laid her feeble hand impressively upon his arm, and as her clear, calm eyes scanned his face, remarked with that simple directness that is always best calculated to make a stranger forget his stranger-hood.

"I am glad to see you, very glad as well as well as grateful for your kindness in giving us such an early call when there were so many claimants upon your time and attention."

Then passing with easy facility to other topics, she gradually drew from him many a treasured pearl of thought and fancy that had hitherto lain unseen, waiting for the summons of a congenial soul, while from the varied stores of her own strength, deep and life she brought forth many a wonderful gem of comfort, encouragement and hope

"I have suffered many things," she said, in her sweet, quaint phraseology, "the loss of husband, children, friends and fortune, but I have never lost my trust in Him, who gave and taken of all my blessings, and now, in my old age and helplessness, He has given me this little sunny home-nest and my own baby's baby to comfort me with her love to the last."

An arm crept tenderly around her neck, and a soft, tear wet cheek was pressed lovingly for a moment against her own. There was no need of words, heart answered to heart, and the aged woman was comforted and the younger strengthened by this little wordless expression of mutual love and trust.

It was a beautiful picture, and when, that evening, the young minister read the chapter for family devotions, Abigail's womanly shrinkings was quite lost in the interest with he chose the touching story of the fair Moabitess and her aged friend, while, pleasantly abstracted, she recalled the events of the day, and the minister's evident interest in the inmates of the little cottage

"It was shy, and didn't show her best graces of heart and mind on a short acquaintance," she thought; "but she was always at home with them, and could speak freely and without restraint; so perhaps it would be best to have her there as much as possible, and if—"

"Forgive all our vain and wandering thoughts," prayed the minister, and poor Abigail dropped her guilty head upon her hands, and tried to forget all about Rose Mayberry's possible future in an earnest, when petition for the patient endurance of which her conscorely tried heart stood so much in need.

That was a happy winter, and if Mr. Eldon did spend a great deal of his leisure at the Mayberry cottage, nobody wondered, for old Mrs. Mayberry was such "pleasant company," and besides, Abigail Standfield was almost always with him on these occasions, and public opinion had already established her as the future mistress of the parsonage. To be sure there were some who hinted that Jotham Springer might have a word to say about that, but they were frowned down by the more knowing part of the community.

It was at the close of a raw March day, and Mr. Eldon had just returned from a long sleigh drive over the hills to visit a sick parishioner, tired in mind and body, and as he rode slowly along through the fast-gathering twilight shadows, his eyes instinctively turned toward the bend in the road just beyond, from which the lighted windows of Mrs. Mayberry's cottage always looked out at him with a gleam of friendly welcome—a welcome that had never failed him, he thought gratefully, as across the cold stretch of snow shone a tiny ray of brightness, that somehow, while it reminded him of those Mayberry sunny smile, made him forget Mrs. Standfield's waiting tea-table, as making his way up the snow-covered path, he knocked lightly at the door of the cottage.

He waited strangely beneath the harp wand for some moments, but no one answered his summons, and taking the privilege of an every day friend, he quietly lifted the latch and entered the little kitchen, warm, lighted, and with the daintily spread table in the centre of the floor, but vacant. A hum of voices in Mrs. Mayberry's rooms attracted his attention, and advancing, he stood for an instant upon the threshold of the open door, unseen and unheard, while he took in at a glance the full beauty of the picture before him

Upon the low cushion, at her grandmother's feet, sat the young girl, her brown hair brightened to gold in the firelight, and her sweet face gravely shy as she said, apparently in reply to some question of her grandmother:

"No, grandma, no, no don't urge me, please. I have thought it over and over, but I don't and I can't love him."

The old lady smoothed caressingly the soft bands above her child's forehead, and there was a little quaver of disappointment in her tones as she said hesitatingly:

"I always thought that—that you liked him very much. He is a good, honest, intelligent man, what can you have against him?"

"Nothing"

And the fair forehead grew crimson in the ruddy light, while a regretful look, saddened for a moment the girlish face, as she added, in a lower tone

"I did like him very much, so much that I used to think that it was really love, especially when he was so kind and helpful during your sickness last summer, and if he had asked me then, perhaps I should have answered him differently; but now—"

What has changed your mind?"

For a moment there was no answer. The girl's face was hidden in the folds of her grandmother's dress, while even the small hands that rested upon her lap grew red with shame.

"Did you remember," and she raised her head with an air of pretty womanly dignity, as if deprecating her display of childish weakness a moment before, "the first sermon that Mr. Eldon preached for us? I told you all about it when I came home. It was on the love of Christ for his church, and he compared it in strength, tenderness and entire unselfishness, to the purest, highest type of earthly love—the love that God himself sanctioned and blessed in the beginning, when the world was new. I can not explain it to you, to myself, even, but I knew, while I listened to his noble conception of a real, true earthly love, that I had never before known even the meaning of the word, much less its power."

"You are wiser than I dreamed, little one," and as she bent to kiss the rosy lips uplifted to her own, Mrs. Mayberry could then even in the doorway fastened upon them with a look she could not fail to interpret; while, unheeding her startled salutation, the young man stepped hastily forward, his face pale with emotion, and dropping upon his knees by the girl's side, drew both, her trembling hands within his own, as he said, with a manly tenderness that was in itself the best declaration of his love:

ASSEMBLY CHAMBER,
Albany, March 16th, 1874.

To Doctors Carpenter, Becher, Buckley, Brewer, Stady, Bordwell and Holden

Gentlemen—Nothing would please me more than to accept your invitation, but I am just now so positively engaged that I cannot at present spend more than Albany. If you will specify an evening a week or two hence, I shall and will try gladly reciprocate your politeness and do my best to entertain you upon the very interesting and exceedingly important subjects which you mention.

Very respectfully and truly yours,

T. S. LAMBERT, M. D.

Albany, March 16th, 1874

In accordance with the foregoing correspondence, and also upon the invitation of the Insurance Committee of the Assembly of the Legislature of New York State, the Lecture, therein referred to, will be given on Wednesday evening, April 1st, in the Assembly Chamber

(From the Albany Argus)

DR LAMBERT UPON "BIOMETRY."

The crowded state of our columns in yesterday's issue compelled us to defer notice of Dr. Lambert's address before the committee of the Legislature, on Wednesday evening. The house was crowded by an attentive audience, including members of the medical fraternity, the bar and the clergy, and other professional men. The scope of the lecture was to present, in some of its leading principles and features, the subject of "Biometry," or the laws of hereditary descent, and the signs and indications of longevity, as a science, positive, practicable, and of very great value in its application in all the various relations of life. He gave practical illustrations referring to eminent men in the audience, of the signs and indications of longevity—and stated very clearly and succinctly the laws and principles upon which the science rests. The practical facts noticed by all, of hereditary tendencies, were shown to have relation to the inherent capabilities of living. These conditions can all be measured, and a judgment upon them by one who has become even ordinarily expert may be relied upon—especially in determining the proper premiums to be charged in insuring lives. Referring to the "few pounds" tables in use by the Insurance Companies, their disagreement with each other and their inconsistencies so assumed data were pointed out. It was urged that the only safe and just basis was found in following the teachings of Biometry, and rating each risk upon its own characteristics. The safety, as well as the equity, of this was shown in the fact, as an illustration, that in the company with which he is connected (the American Popular), which originated the plan, the death losses have been for the last year only between three and four per thousand premiums, while some companies have lost as high as twenty-four, and many over ten per thousand—the varying rates of loss being in themselves proof of the unreliability of the tables, and of the general average system of insuring all lives of the same age at the same rate. Life insurance, he said, is simply protection of the family in case of the death of the head, and the simple and common sense method is found, in the payment, year by year, of the natural premium representing the mortality belonging properly to that year,—the "Term Life Insurance Premium,"—at low cost, without surplus, without "dividends," without speculation, without deception.

Dr. Lambert was appropately introduced by Dr Carpenter, of the Assembly, and was listened to throughout his long address with marked attention.

No other company in the world applies these principles, or gives the advantage of a lower rate of premiums to those possessed of the natural inheritance of long life

Ten only questions with them are sound health and the general average mortality of a given age.

The AMERICAN POPULAR, by its graduation of risks, insures each according to the individual characteristics of the risk,

It has the premium rate accordingly without any special reference to the age

Its premiums are based therefore upon the actual risk of the individual, charging him only the cost of carrying his risk.

This is JUST, EQUITABLE and SAFE.

Eight years' experience has proved these facts.
